Course Description:

This course offers an introduction to the comparative study of terrorism, civil war, revolution, and other forms of domestic-level political violence. We will consider a variety of theoretical and empirical approaches to studying violence. The focus of the class is on learning how social scientific tools can be used to understand conflict. No mathematical background beyond high school algebra is prerequisite for the course. However, readings with technical content (both game theoretic and statistical) are assigned. Basic game theory and statistics will be introduced as necessary.

Course Requirements:

Reading/Participation (10%): Articles or book chapters are assigned for each class meeting. You should do the readings prior to the class for which they are assigned and participate actively in class. All of the readings are available either from the universities electronic reserve, online JSTOR, or website links are provided on the syllabus.

Short papers (25% each): Two short papers (3-5 pages) will be assigned during the semester. Topic questions will be handed out and students will have two weeks to write the papers from the time the questions are distributed.

Final Paper (40%): Students are expected to turn in a final paper on an independently chosen research topic at the end of the semester. Topics should be chosen in consultation with either the professor or TA. A one to two page paper proposal, outlining the research question to be answered and the approach to be taken is due by November 12.

Course Schedule:
