Course Outline: There are two kinds of people out there. One kind says that everything has always pretty much been the same, but we’ve got more and more of it. The other kind says that something happened and that things are different. Most academics like the second kind because (1) something (supposedly) happened, which means things are already getting interesting; (2) we can argue over where and when it happened. This course is tracing thoughts on the biggest something of all that happened, starting from someone who was a bit more of the first kind (the more and more) and ending up with folks who were decidedly of the second kind. (See how much fun we’re having already, because something happened—we went from the first kind of analyst to the second kind!)

Sometimes people thought that what happened was that Western society became qualitatively different, as a whole, from other societies and from its earlier self. Nowadays, we (confusingly) often use the word “modernity” to mean this allegedly new social form. (The confusion comes about because the word can either mean “what’s happening right now” or “what’s been happening for the past four hundred years.”) Lots of things happened in Western society in this time, but many people focused on the social organization of production, and for good reason. We’re going to look at the development of one particular important, and particularly interesting, set of approaches to the ways in which society and economy developed in the West and then (allegedly) spread to the whole world.

We’ll be looking at three pivotal theorists of this transformation coming from three different intellectual, disciplinary, and temporal backgrounds, namely Adam Smith, Karl Marx and Max Weber. We flesh these theories out with some other interpretations of the key transitions to a market society and, because one always like to know how things turn out, some information on where we are today.

Readings:
Most of the readings are books available at the Seminary Co-op Bookstore. Other readings will be posted to our CHALK site. If printing things out from this is a burden to you, let me know, and we’ll work out another way.

Requirements:
Not surprisingly, a big part of the class is doing the readings, and perhaps re-reading if you realize after class that you missed a lot of what was going on. Regular and cheerful attendance is expected; that means and contributing not only about what you understand and appreciate, but also what you don’t understand and/or hate. There are three five page papers. A “five page paper” is one that can be anywhere from a single word to five pages (double-spaced, 12 point, 1” margins) but not an n-dash more. You can put a cover page on if you want, or if you have the space, your name can be at the top. The idea is to work on expressing your thoughts in as direct and elegant a fashion as you can.

Tuesday, September 29: What’s up?
Who are we, particularly and generally? What do we do, here and elsewhere? Why?

Thursday, October 1: The Division of Labor and the Theory of Value
Read: Introduction and Plan of the Work (pp. 1-5), Book I Chapters I-III (pp. 7-25), Chapters IV-VIII (pp. 26-43,53-97), Chapter XI, Conclusion (pp. 275-278). We will continue our discussion of value and price next time.

Tuesday, October 6: Goods (Freeing Markets)
Read: Book IV, Chapter II (pp. 474-481), Volume II (note page numbering re-starts!), Book IV, Chapters IX, (pp. 208-209); Jan DeVries, The Industrious Revolution, Chapter 2 (pp. 40-72).

Thursday, October 8: Bads (Public Goods)
Read: Book V, Chapter I (pp. 282-309), Conclusion (pp. 338-340).
The first paper is assigned today, due next Monday (October 12) at 4:30.

If you wanted…Smith’s views may be seen as an advance on those of John Locke. See his Second Treatise on Civil Government.

Tuesday, October 13: Rousseau and the Cost of Dependence: The State of Nature
Read: Part I. The Introduction is strongly recommended but not required.

Thursday, October 15: Rousseau and the Cost of Dependence: Civil Society
Read: Part II. And I strongly urge you read Rousseau’s notes, though this is not required.
Tuesday, October 20: Estrangement

Read: Estranged labor (pp. 70-86)

If you wanted... These writings are difficult to understand without familiarity with Hegel. The Marx for Beginners comic book is actually quite good, but you might explore Hegel, especially the Philosophy of Right.

---

Thursday, October 22: Dialectical Materialism

Read: Marx and Engels, The German Ideology, (pp. 149-163, 172-174)

---

Tuesday, October 27: History and Ends

Read: Marx and Engels, The Communist Manifesto, (pp. 469f, 473-491)

Thursday, October 29: Marx: Theory of Value

Read: Marx, Grundrisse, pp. 221-226, 236-244; Capital I, 302 -312, 319-336.

Tuesday, November 3: Marx: Theory of Surplus Value

Read: Marx, Capital I, 336-364.

Thursday, November 5: Implications

Read: Marx, Grundrisse, pp. 247-250, 278-292; Capital I, 384-417, 422-438

The second paper is assigned today, due next Monday (November 10) at 4:30.

Tuesday, November 10: The Great Transformation

We now turn to some strong theories of how markets were formed in the great transformation.

Read: Polanyi, The Great Transformation, Beacon edition, Chs 3-8, (pp. 33- 102), 139-150 (recommended), 163-6, 178-183, 192-197.

Thursday, November 12: Weber: The Spirit of Capitalism

Read: Author’s introduction, Part I, and as far as you can...things will be best if we have read as much of this as we can for both days.

Tuesday, November 17: Practical Ethics

Read: Part II

If you wanted... Sociologists pit Weber against Marx; Weber vainly claimed Hegel as his only challenge; but intellectual historians might emphasize Nietzsche’s blast (Beyond Good and Evil, Genealogy of Morals, The Antichrist) as the most important context for Weber’s circle to rethink values and history.
Thursday, November 19: Weber and Rationalization

Read: all.

Tuesday, November 24: The Creation of Markets

The third paper is assigned today, due next Monday (November 31) at 4:30.

Did you forget about Thanksgiving? What do you have to be thankful for? If you don’t know now, you will after next week’s reading! Have fun!

Tuesday December 1: The Destruction of Citizens

Read: Stephen Greenhouse, The Big Squeeze, Knopf.

If you wanted…in recent years people read Barbara Ehrenreich, Nickel and Dimed, New York: Henry Holt and Co., 2001, which is quite good…but perhaps overly optimistic, as this was written in the days when people could get jobs that would run them into the ground….!

Other little things….

* Office hours “by appointment” are usually best for you, though you are always welcome to drop by during my scheduled hours. The way to do it is to email me a set of times you can meet in order of preference, and then I’ll choose the one I can do. This shortens the number of back-and-forth emails and allows us to set something up quicker.

 Of course we run on the honor system here, but the internet has changed the nature of academic misconduct in such a way as to lead to more “borderline cases.” As you are responsible for knowing where this line is, if you have any doubts, definitely talk to me and advisors here.
